A CONVERSATION WITH ARNOLD HARBERGER

Arnold Harberger

Distinguished Professor of Economics at UCLA and the Gustavus F. and Ann M. Swift Distinguished Service Professor Emeritus in Economics at the University of Chicago, Arnold C. Harberger has been a dominant force in the development of global economic policies. From India to Chile, from Panama to Azerbaijan, Harberger's research and on-the-ground engagement with leaders of finance, industry, and government have shown the efficacy and wide-ranging importance of his approach to economics. Continually focused on the professionalism of his chosen discipline, Harberger is an exemplar of its application, and he remains a highly respected and relevant economist in the twenty-first century.

Richard Lanham

Richard Lanham, Professor Emeritus in English at UCLA, is one of the preeminent experts on rhetoric—its history, theory, and future. His many works, including Analyzing Prose and Revising Prose, remain among the most popular and influential texts on rhetorical analysis and practice. Lanham's recent book, The Economics of Attention (2006), owes something to his conversations with UCLA colleagues, including Harberger, Demsetz, Lal, and other influential members of the Department of Economics.

George Shultz, Sergio De Castro, and Ernesto Fontaine offer personal reflections on the important impact of Harberger's more than sixty years of work in global economics.
